1. In November 1954 [ ] two ships under construction at the Baltic Shipyard in Leningrad. The ships were observed from such a position that they appeared to be on the same building way. One of the ships was forward and higher than the other. The higher ship was the larger of the two, and [ ] it was a cruiser. The bridge superstructure had been built on the ship, but it did not have any stacks. [ ] the smaller vessel was a destroyer; this ship had one mast. The fitting-out quay at the shipyard was empty.
